Environetics Expands With Offices in Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Korea

Architectural design firm adds depth and breadth to its professional offerings.

LOS ANGELES, Calif., August 16, 2010 – Environetics, a full service architecture, interior design, engineering, planning and LEED consulting firm, celebrates the success of the first two quarters with new independently-owned alliance offices in Philadelphia, PA, Englewood Cliffs, NJ, and Seoul, Korea. Together with its Los Angeles and New York offices, the firm creates environments for clients in the corporate, academic, healthcare/senior care, industrial, hospitality/retail, residential, recreation/fitness and the public sectors.

“The addition of these offices is the realization of a vision to provide a full range of services in the built environment, and to offer solutions with exceptional design that reflect and extend our clients’ cultures,” said Rodney Stone, president of Environetics, Los Angeles office. “The experienced professionals in these offices will harness their collective intelligence, to provide comprehensive solutions for our clients in reaching their organizations vision and mission.”

The new alliance brings depth in a wide range of markets to Environetics, with projects like the Tasty Baking Company’s new Bakery & Distribution Center, the New School of Education at The College of New Jersey, the Delaware Welcome & Travel Center, and Hildesheim Golf Club in Seoul. The combined offices include 70 professionals who offer a broad range of services including planning, architecture, interior design, MEP and structural engineering, pre-lease analysis, programming, building evaluation, corporate image development, project management, and sustainable design and LEED consulting.
